SHIPPING NOTES.

The British bark Royal Allice, Capt. Zeal, left to-day for San Francisco with 25,665 bags of sugar weighing 3,753,353 pounds, and valued at $177,744.28.

WHOSE HORSE IS IT?

Some person left a horse, saddle and bridle at Mr. W. G. Irwin's premises at Kapiolani Park on the day of the races and probably having got a little mixed in naming the winning horses in the various races has forgotten to call for his property. Mr. Irwin wishes us to say that from the looks of the animal he considers that he has already paid more than its value in providing it with a week's board, and unless someone calls for it shortly he will send it to the pound to save further expense.

LOCAL & GENERAL NEWS.

The Nuuanu streetcars are being well patronized.

ASTONISHING bargains can be obtained at the store of Egan & Co.

Four passengers left for the Volcano this morning on the W. G. Hall.

The steamship Kinan is due tomorrow morning from windward ports.

Copies of the first volume of Forbender's "Polynesian Races" are advertised for.

Look at the display of gents' furnishing goods in Mr. N. S. Sachs' store window.

Mr. H. B. Bailey of Makawao, Maui, who holds an auctioneer license, has a notice elsewhere.

A FULL attendance is requested at the meeting of the Yachting and Rowing Association this evening.

A DISSOLUTION of the partnership existing between Messrs. James Dodd and Harry Miller is announced.

The Hanalei Sugar Mill Company have accepted a charter granted by the Minister of Interior, and elected their officers.

On Monday, July 1st, Mr. J. F. Morgan will sell twenty-one shares of the new issue of Paia plantation, consolidated stock.

The Rev. E. G. Porter left for Punaluu on the W. G. Hall this morning. He will visit the Volcano and return by way of Hilo.

Mr. L. J. Levey has sold quite a number of season tickets for the Hicks-Sawyers Minstrels performances.

Branch.

LECTURE ON JAVA.

Rev. E. G. Porter Gives an Interesting Talk on the Dutch East Indies.

There was a large audience in the Y. M. C. A. hall yesterday evening to hear Rev. E. G. Porter, of Lexington, Mass., lecture on Java. Mr. S. D. Fuller, General Secretary of the Association, introduced the lecturer in neatly chosen phrases, saying that what this community lost in quantity of visiting talent, from its isolated position, it seemed, from the record of that platform for the past few years, to have gained in quality.

Mr. Porter prefaced his lecture with remarks on the popular notion that travelers are to be envied for the pleasure derived from constantly coming upon new scenes. They had to pay a penalty, however, in the impurity with which they were asked for information regarding their experiences. But when complimented by the attendance of such a large crowd as this, he would be ungrateful if he did not be pleased at the opportunity of telling all he knew.

The island of Java is very populous, having 21,000,000 of people, or two-thirds the number populating the British Islands—this vast number being crowded into a territory from 50 to 150 miles wide and about 600 miles in length. The population is mostly Malay, speaking different languages, the foreigners speaking scarcely anything but Dutch. The island is not unlike Cuba in appearance and climate. It is of volcanic formation, there being 40 or 50 volcanic peaks. A dozen of these peaks are still active volcanoes, so that as one travels along he can almost always see a volcano smoking. The climate is very warm yet tempered by sea breezes. He was surprised to find that the heat was not so great as in Boston or New York in summer. While often in the nineties it seldom reaches a hundred degrees, while in Hankow, China, he met with 105 degrees. There was a large proportion of moisture in the air, however, which bred mould on everything. In consequence it was necessary to keep the houses well white-washed. The Dutch houses were very neat, no less so than the bungalows of India. Not only was the island most populous but it was extremely productive. It yielded $30,000,000 annually to the revenue of the kingdom of Holland. Coffee is a leading staple and a large share of it finds its way to America. The best coffee for ordinary purposes is the Java, but the most delicate is the Mocha, while the best cup of coffee obtainable is a combination of both, whether in Paris, New York or London, and London always gives the worst coffee. But they will generally give you a better cup of tea in the British Colonies than in Java. The people of the latter make their coffee in a curious way. They prepare an extract of coffee and bottle it up, and in every house and hotel they have a bottle of the extract, and they bring you hot milk to mix with it. We had much better coffee in the Hawaiian Islands than any he had got in Australia or New Zealand. We were to be congratulated on the quality of our coffee, and he did not see why we should not have a large exportation of the article. He knew that the Brazilian coffee was considered good, but he had never regarded it as equal to the Java.

There are nearly 300,000 Chinese in Java and they are all busily at work in trade and industry. Nineteen-tenths of them come from Amoy and few of them ever go back. Their children are brought up as Chinese and not as Javanese. The largest Chinese resident is at Batavia and he is called the "Major Chinaman," to whom all difficulties among Chinese are referred—the same as the Arabs who have a "Captain" who is responsible for the good conduct of all Arabs. There are a few Armenians in Java who are very clever in trade. The largest proportion of foreigners dressing like us are Dutch, and as all talk Dutch you might suppose you were in Holland. There are three classes of railway carriages, the first class high enough, the second reasonably moderate, and the third marvelously cheap. The lecturer commended this provision for the poor traveling cheaply, in comparison with Australia where it was taken for granted there were no poor, and the same with America. The cheap fares largely increased the revenues of the railways. Batavia was a well-equipped port with fine stone piers and iron buildings. The wealthy Dutch tended to move back into the country, where they had established parks, tramcars, pleasure drives, and beautiful bungalows. Batavia was the old name for Holland in the Roman era.

Mr. Porter heard a good deal about the great eruption of a few years ago in the Strait of Sunda, although ships now pass over the site as safely as before; but he always had a feeling of insecurity in that country. He never experienced such terrific thunder storms as in Java. Taken these in connection with the great heat it was no wonder that great changes were sudden. Crops were remarkably flourishing—he never saw a dead tree there, nor anywhere had seen vegetation so luxuriant and prolific. Animal life was equally abundant. There were fierce tigers in parts, also snakes in large numbers, making the jungles unsafe and necessitating the carrying of lanterns at night.

The two States of Djokjokarta and Surakarta are distinguished as the Vorstenlanden (Lands of the Princes). The former has a native sultan, the latter an emperor, living in palaces although vassals of the Dutch. The latter preserve the peace on the island and have a considerable army, half native and half Dutch troops. The lecturer was much impressed with the kindness and hospitality of the people. On a short drive he thought he met ten thousand people, men and women, going to or coming from work, talking incessantly. They were hater larger in the brim even than those often seen on the Chinese. He was much impressed with the six horses provided him with a carriage by a gentleman, but learning that such was the usual state in which a gentleman drove he submitted. It was explained that there was less danger of fractiousness with so many horses. Footmen also went along to whip the horses on a gallop over the hills. When a Governor General took a drive he was furnished in addition with outriders to give him the requisite dignity. The lecturer described the exceeding deliciousness and cheapness of fruits, he having bought 100 specimens of a certain kind for the equivalent of five American nickels. Still, the high prices in America and Hawaii denoted a high standard of civilization, while the people of Java have a low scale of civilization with low prices.

The native people are mostly Muslims. He had visited a magnificent Hindoo temple, however, one of the remains of the Hindoo period. When Mohammedanism spread westward into Europe it spread eastward to the Indian Archipelago. In Java he failed to observe the distinguishing cry of the Mohammedan or the five prayers a day. Those who embrace Christianity have to form Christian communities among themselves, and there were notably two of these in Java. Incidentally the lecturer told of the unusual case of an Englishwoman who had almost forgotten her mother tongue, and finding it difficult to use in conversing with him but being fluent only in Dutch and Malay. About half of a Dutch house is the veranda and this is made the great place of reception. He was struck with the universal practice of potting the garden plants, that being found the best means of preserving them from parasites. There were from 100 to 1000 potted plants in the gardens of Dutch grandees. The characteristic feast of hospitality was the rice table, the guest and entertainers each being provided with a prodigious dish of rice, into which beef, fowl, eggs and other edibles were deposited, when the hodge-podge thus formed was all sent down the usual way. He could not accomplish the whole dish, but never knew the Dutch to be beaten in so doing.

The lecturer told of a wealthy Dutch planter who lived in one of the Christian communities so that he might be of assistance to the people of that faith. He also described the origin of this community. In 1714 a Huguenot, who owned that plantation, left his estate to his slaves who were Christians to be held by Christians forever. It was difficult to maintain their faith, as the policy of the Dutch Government was to allow no missionary effort on the island. For over a hundred years they were not allowed to have a preacher settled with them, but were allowed to go once a year to hear a chaplain in Batavia. They have now a missionary, a large church, and young men studying for the ministry, after they had kept the faith for a hundred years by going every year to preaching at Batavia. Another Christian colony was founded about 35 years ago, when 3000 people were converted by a watchmaker at Sourabaya, the means employed being substituting Christian subjects for those of heathen mythology in free picture entertainments for the people according to a prevalent custom. There are neither English nor American missions in Java.

Mr. Porter spoke of the beardless condition of the men in Java, the minority who started a few hairs having them drawn with pinners by experts. He mentioned the two-horse post carts that were driven furiously, the hotels with their profusion of wall engravings, and the general love of the bath, in which water is poured over head and shoulders. Some braved the danger from crocodiles by plunging into the rivers. He spoke of the peculiar modes of carrying children in the East, the fondness of the Java people for music and its free gratification, the custom of carrying daggers and the mania for running amuck, together with the precaution of guard houses, in which the native men have all to serve in turn, provided against those madmen. The "thief catcher" was a sort of barbed-pitchfork used by the guards for harpooning fugitive criminals.

The Governor-General has double the salary of the President of the United States, it being £20,000 a year, a moiety of which is, however, reserved until he leaves office, to ensure his living in the dignity becoming a retired ruler of Java. He has the assistance of 22 governors in the residencies.

In conclusion Mr. Porter recommended Java as an interesting country for the tourist. At times fevers and cholera prevailed, and the best time to go there was from spring to October. He advised any of his auditors who might be inclined to visit Java, to go to Australia first and take one of the fine steamers leaving Brisbane for London by way of Java, calling at all Queensland ports, Thursday Island, Torres Straits, Gulf of Carpentaria, and tying up at those beautiful stone piers of Batavia.

BLUE RIBBON LEAGUE.

The entertainment Saturday evening at the Y. M. C. A. hall under the auspices of the Blue Ribbon League was very well attended. The Rev. H. H. Gowen, President, presided, and Mr. P. C. Jones occupied a chair on the platform. The programme opened with a piano solo excellently played by that rising young pianist, Miss Lottie Parmelee. Mr. Justice Dole gave a reading, which was most attentively listened to, followed with a song, nicely rendered by Miss Beckwith who played her own accompaniment. Miss Sarah Darlington then gave a reading. Mrs. J. F. Brown was encored for her vocal effort in a song and responded.

The Rev. Dr. Beckwith began his address by reading the pathetic poem of Mrs. Browning, "The Cry of the Children," and with this as his text asked this question, "What causes the cry of the children, who are 'weeping in the playtime of the others'?" The answer was to be found in the ravages of drink which kindling the fires of hell upon the hearth, robbed life of all its beauty and delight. He then quoted a story of a child in Honolulu to show how all the delight in Nature's beauty is being torn out of the heart of childhood by the associations of vice which the drink traffic plants in the home, and after telling the story of the drunkard's children following the coffin of their pauper mother through the streets of New York with the cry, "Give me back my mother," he pleaded for total abstinence for the sake of the children, that the blight of this terrible misery might be spared to their young lives.

After a few remarks by President Gowen the entertainment was brought to a close by the singing of a hymn. Two young men signed the pledge.

OUR SUMMARY.

The Bulletin Weekly Summary is out to-day, and the way copies are being sold shows that it is an exceedingly valuable number. It contains amongst other things the only complete accounts of the races on Kamehameha day, the annual meeting of the Stranger's Friend Society, the sermons on Home and Foreign Missions, receptions at the Palace and the combined band concert at Emma Square. Then there is the calendar of the Second Circuit Court, the full score of the baseball matches, Central Union Sunday School picnic and other interesting local and foreign news. The editorial department is complete and the week's shipping is given. Be sure and secure copies before they are all gone.
